How this show came to be:

I first heard of “I Regret Nothing” while looking for something to listen to at work. I happened upon a podcast that featured plays written by playwright from around the world. Their first show was “IRN”. I never listened to any of the other episodes. I was immediately taken with this show. I listened to it over and over. “I wish I could see this on stage.” I thought to myself and then thought no more about it.

That is, until a fellow cast member heard me talking about the show and my desire to direct it. He found me the author’s email. I worked up the courage and wrote to him.

His response was brief “Be my guest.” And so started my search for a theater brave enough to let me, a green director, direct a controversial play that nobody had heard of. Twice I was turned down by local theaters. I began to think the show would never be made. And then Holdcraft Theater reached out to me.

They WANTED edgy and experimental theater. They WANTED to do the shows nobody else in the area would even dream about. I pitched them “IRN” and they gladly said yes.

This show has been such a pleasure to bring to you. It has gone through many different changes from my original idea, but most of them were for the best. Still, I’m really excited to present to you my first attempt at doing something a little different from what most community theaters usually do.

I hope you like it.
